“ I am so sorry for your loss. At times like I find great comfort in God's word. "Do not be amazed at this for the hour is coming in which all those in the memorial tombs will hewe his voice and come out."

“ Karl Johnson a friend and neighbor. Mr. J, I would refer to him the most interesting, smart, knowledgeable and down to earth kind of guy. He was a caring and big hearted person. I'm gonna miss him a lot and all those interesting and wonderful stories that he told of his life growing up. It's gonna be quiet, strange and weird when I have to pass his door and he is not there. RIP Mr. J.

“ Karl was the straightest of " straight arrows." He had a remarkable life as a young Midwesterner, a U.S. Navy diver in WWII, and a distinguished scientist at Los Alamos in the post-war period.I knew him only a little time, but he made a tremendous impact on my consciousness and I regarded him as a firm and understanding friend, full of wonderful stories and a living history of some of the most interesting moments in he 20th century, yet also still fully aware, contemporary and vital in the 21st.I am sorry that he did not live to celebrate with vibrant gusto his 90th birthday, but i also know from my talks with him at the end that " nothing became his life life like his leaving of it," and that he was serenely prepared---- in his own very deliberate, honest and directly authentic way-- to meet " face to face" the Jesus Christ who was his life-long spiritual companion and constant counsellor in good times and in bad.He told me he had absolutely no regrets about leaving this world, and that in spite of some rough patches in his earthly existence, that if he were given the chance and could somehow miraculously live his life over again, he would journey on exactly as he had, and not change a single thing. Few of us can say this with such equanimity,thoughtfulness and settled acceptance at the end of our own pilgrimage through this world of mingled sunshine and shadow. Add to this his subtle, understated, characteristically Mid-Western humor, his courage in speaking out about what he believed in, and also his readiness to acting upon his convictions with no holds barred, as well as his liberal gift for friendship and hearty enjoyment of the good things of life, and two apt quotations from Shakespeare come to mind: that indeed " Here was a Man," and that with that man, " Ripeness is all." Beyond this, however, Karl Johnson was an archetypal Man of Faith--- and I trust that the stamina of Faith that sustained him in life now has earned him -- -not simply a well- earned rest, for his restless spirit and ever-enquiring mind were in themselves too restless to ever abide a complete cessation of activity--- but a continuing quest for the essence of the ideal. Add I cannot fail to augment his belief with my own that karl Johnson is now enjoying the Gospel fulfillment of the wonderful gift of being human that we were privileged to have him share with us so generously--- and so abundantly .
